Warrior Cats by Erin Hunter is a series of children's novels that includes over thirty books. It begins by introducing us to a pet kitten who gets lost in the forest. He is found by another cat which brings him to her tribe. The readers are then given a brief explanation on the lore behind the four tribes that live in the forest. The kitten, now named Firepaw, joins the Thunder tribe. The tribe's members give him the cold shoulder at first, but they eventually warm up to him. Twenty five books later, Firepaw, now named Firestar and promoted to tribe head, leaves our world while valiantly protecting his kin. Even after his death, the story goes on as ~~many~~ several other protagonists have been introduced by now. Warrior Cats, raised me, and I think there are many reasons as to why it appeals so much to the younger generations. First of all, the main character starting his new life in the forest is a metaphor to growing up as a person. The books take the reader on an emotional rollercoaster, all while being kid-friendly. Secondly, this is but one problem that the book mentions, and there are many more. Firepaw feels clueless and scared at first, but gets better with time. Secondly, the writing is immaculate. The author uses simple yet vivid storytelling, which is essential for a children's novel. I could list more reasons why this series of novels is an amazing choice as your child's first read, but I assume there's no need. The series has left behind a huge legacy, and it remains a best seller in many countries.
