It's widely known that films can influence attitudes. I can say it with confidence because I've recently watched a film that has changed my attitude towards musicals.

You see, I've never really liked musicals. I always thought that most of the songs felt out of place and unnecessary, so when a friend of mine asked me to watch "SOUND OF MUSIC" with her, I was hesitant. But as you can understand, it completely changed my perspective on musicals.

The film is set in Austria in 1930s. It follows a young woman named Maria, a nun who becomes a governess for the Von Trapp family. The children live by military rules created by their father, Captain Von Trapp, who became strict and cold after his wife's death. Feeling sorry for the children, Maria teaches them to sing. The Captain, despising Maria at first for failing to reinforce his rules, is deeply touched by his children's singing, becomes kinder and falls in love with Maria.

The film's message is very inspiring. We see Captain evolve from being harsh to loving all thanks to music, which he allegedly adored before his wife's passing. We see that music brings the Von Trapp household back to life, and I was so touched by it that I cried like a baby. Now I have a new appreciation for musicals because songs in films can be very powerful when done right.
