THE GOOD KIDS

An armed robber is heading towards the bank, and demands all of the money in it. The banker, forced to cooperate, surrenders and gives him several bags, filled with money to the brim. At the same time, the young heroes notice that, and start brainstorming ideas on how to catch the robber. And one idea strikes one of the kids' heads. ~~At~~ The idea is to tie a strong, yet thin rope in the robbers' legs area outside the bank building across the two decorative poles, ~~they do exactly the things~~ so that the robber doesn't notice and trips over, helpless, into the sheriff's hands. They plan out everything once again, and start working on the trap. Once they're prepared it, they check it and start waiting for the robber to come out. When he finally does, everything went completely to plan, he doesn't notice, he trips over, and falls exactly into the sheriff's hands, and he handcuffs the robber red-handed. The story tells us that even little kids can help the country and there's no need to be sheriff to gain respect.
